In Italy and Tunisia many institutions managing archaeological sites and companies operating in the cultural tourism sector, lack professionals due to inadequate training programmes. The CEFEL project ensures coordination between management structures of cultural sites, relevant companies and professional trainers to reduce the mismatch between the offer and the demand for professionals in the field and create new jobs for young people. The partners create a common platform between training structures and enterprises, and develop professional training courses for graduates. The project is also providing new products and services to two start-ups in the cultural heritage management sector.
