Stray animals may transmit several infectious diseases: the regions of Vynohradiv (UA) and Rzeszów (PL) are struggling with this problem, due to the insufficient control and immunization, poor equipment and irresponsible attitude of the owners of the animals. To reduce epidemiological risks, the CBC4animals project partners decided to introduce joint prevention activities. The project foresees the treatment, chipping, vaccination, sterilization of stray animals in Vynohradiv and in Rzeszów. Furthermore, two centers are being equipped with specialized medical devices – the Animal Protection Organization in Rzeszów and the Animal Control Centre in Vynohradiv – which were built with project's funds. Staff of the Ukrainian and Polish entities will also exchange surgery experience and other professional skills. The control of the stray animals' population and their immunization will significantly decrease the direct epidemiological threat. At the same time, the exchange of experience between the partners and the educational campaigns carried out, will improve the level of services and possibility of finding owners for homeless animals.
